Staenberg-Loup Jewish Community Center and Rose Medical Center Announce
New Partnership to Bring Health Education and Awareness to Community

Partnership connects audiences from both organizations through community outreach activities

DENVER, Colo., December 11, 2018 – The Staenberg-Loup Jewish Community Center (JCC Denver) and Rose Medical Center just announced a new three year partnership, commencing in early 2019, that brings health education and awareness to the community. Through the partnership, the JCC Denver will have a health concierge service desk in the main lobby where an employee of Rose Medical Center will answer health questions for members and visitors. The JCC Denver and Rose Medical Center will also host a speaker series about health-related topics that are important to the community, among other services.

“We are so excited about our new partnership with Rose Medical Center because it provides added benefits to our members and visitors in a variety of ways,” said Lara Knuettel, CEO of the Staenberg-Loup Jewish Community Center. “Day to day, our members - and anyone who walks through our front door - will have access to a Rose Medical Center concierge who can answer health questions, recommend a doctor, or help to set up appointments at the medical center. We’re also looking forward to hosting a speaker series with Rose Medical Center where medical professionals will be speaking about health and wellness topics that are relevant to our community.”

“We are proud and excited to embark on this new partnership with the JCC Denver,” said Ryan Tobin, Rose Medical Center president and CEO. “The JCC is a centerpiece of the Jewish community. Having the opportunity to help their members and their loved ones get information and access to care is very meaningful to us. We are excited to have the opportunity to dialogue with JCC members and to deliver the health information and education that is important to them.”

Specific details about the partnership and information about upcoming events will be announced as they are determined.
